Many thanks for your email. Normally I would of course suggest planting a replacement close to the original tree to be felled.
However, as you will see from the photographs, the Ash tree in question is under the canopy of a much larger and mature Oak tree. As a result, it won't be appropriate to plant in the same location with limited light and space. Furthermore, it would be creating a problem for 15-20 years from now when the replacement also grows towards the pavilion in its quest for light.

Best wishes

Gavin
