

Morning Mrs Cossins

Re my site visit to have a look at your Horse Chestnut tree.

The tree has been pollarded many times before and is now showing signs of advanced trunk decay also there are large cavities below last pruning cuts which potentially will run decay down through the trunk.

In my opinion the tree should either be pollarded lower than previously to maybe improve re growth or possibly fell tree completely.

The tree will eventually have to felled at same stage due to increased decay at base.

If you need anymore help please contact me.

Kind regards

Clive
