Dear Emma

In reply to your letter dated 25th January 2024, I would like to make the following comments.

1) I am in favour of the felling of the Scots Pine. It grows right outside my bedroom window, the other side of the garden path and up a slope in a tiny strip of grass. So very near the building I am living in.
2) I am very worried that as the tree is leaning forward towards the building, another storm would bring it down. If it comes down then it would fall right through my neighbour and my bedrooms and across our beds, so I wouldn't like to think of the consequences if it were to fall during the night!
3) The tree that was growing right next to the Scots Pine fell into the church yard in the last storm and the roots are still exposed. I worry that the fallen tree roots have disturbed the Scots Pine root system as they were growing so close together.
With weakened roots the Pine tree could fall at any time.

Kind regards
