To whom it may concern,

I am staggered to hear that HDC are resisting the installation of a permanent speed camera on the A281 at Bucks Green. This dangerous section of road experiences massive speeding issues highlighted not only by data collected by the local Speed Watch Group and the Traffic Calming Group but also by permanent SID data collected over many years and Sussex Police's speed van operations and subsequent support.

The indication that HDC are actively avoiding addressing the speeding issues in the face of overwhelming evidence while also DOUBLING the number of homes in Bucks Green is almost unfathomable, particularly when the costs associated with installation would be covered by S106 funds.

Personally, given the circumstances I would expect HDC to be calling for average speed cameras in both directions as a minimum. It's a shameful display of the disinterest in public safety that we have experienced for years.

As a parent of a child at the local school, I have to walk along the A281 nearly every single school day to take my [REDACTED] to and from school. It can feel extremely unsafe when vehicles are speeding past so close to where we are walking. Something has to be done before an inevitable accident occurs.

Kind regards,
