Reasons for comment:	- Other - Overdevelopment - Trees and Landscaping
Comments:	We have such little countryside left and I feel that since I have gone from a child to an adult buildings have appeared and more countryside has disappeared. I now feel that as my children have become adults and when the next generation comes there won't be any green trees, grass and wildlife left. I feel that at the end of the day if there is a building not in use knock that down and place homes there instead of using what little Greenland we have left.

Not only that but these new homes mean more people, so more families, schools, doctors, hospitals are needed, are more of these places going to built, probably not. How are these meant to cope, when they are already at breaking point. The people who think of these plans and try and put them into practice sit around a big table, and never think of the people who actually matter. We need to think of the ordinary people who matter and not money and profit. Money is not the most important thing in Horsham, as much as people say it is a rich man's town, it is people that matter and animals that matter, wildlife, countryside and fresh air.

Kind regards
