Comments:	One of the reasons we chose to live in Horsham 30 years ago is that it was surrounded by countryside and space for our children to enjoy. We now have grandchildren and would like them to be afforded the same. In those 30 years, there has been so much development surrounding Horsham; traffic has increased, various amenities have become overstretched and overcrowded and, despite so many houses being built, there is little or no change to the infrastructure. Not all families can afford to take their children away on holiday. The open fields, woodland etc are vital to their development and mental health. Seeing birds, deer, butterflies is a wonderful privilege for children but these will and are disappearing as we build over their natural habitats. Building another 120 houses at Newhouse Farm is too much. Yes, we need housing and affordable housing but we also need green spaces.

Kind regards
